

EXPERIENCE

allow yourself to enjoy and experience what a stroll at The Binary Canopy feels like by following the narrative going clockwise walking down the road after a long day at work and seeing this sculpture, thinking what could this solarpunk looking thing be? It seems to stand out at about 16 meters tall. You feel curious yet belittled, invited and intrigued by what could this potentially unfold into. You walk towards it and find a descending walkway, you think, where could this take me? You walk down the slope and begin to....

IMAGINE

EXPLORE

the story being told on the walls. The figures behind the glass make the experience feel like a museum. You learn about the artificial intelligence behind the design strategy, the perils of climate change, and initiatives against global warming. As you get to the tunnel, you are baffled by the clusters of intricate machinery behind the glass consistently working to .....

RETURN

to discover the botanical gardens and enjoy the cooling shade of the sculpture. While walking below the canopy as you cross the street to head back, you think to yourself, 'i wonder how driving under that must feel'. You are then greeted by three swings on the other side, you sit and reflect on what you have learned and smile as you have just discovered your new favorite lunch spot.

SUSTAIN

the systems you just learned about. You see batteries, inverters, tanks and pumps. You feel so immersed by your surroundings that you want to know more. The path begins to slope upwards and the figures reappear on the walls. You learn about the garden's aquaponic system as you make your way out of the tunnel. You look back, and you find a hidden oasis behind the canopy..... you then

