

Water supplies from fog harvesting can help to counteract the desertification process. The heavy planted vegetation system used on trails will contribute to the process of helping to build resilience against these conditions.

