Tolu Corner Sanctuary is a wellness retreat that is designed to reflect the island's volcanic terrain and cultural connection to land and water. The triangular pyramid form represents and the number three, also known as Tolu in Fijian, are shown through three wellness spaces: a pool wing, a sauna wing, and a meditation garden. This image shows the external view of the sanctuary, including the triangular layout. The solar panel array is shaped like flower petals extending outward from the structure. These solar petals collect energy and also help channel rainwater into the site's underground tanks, where it's filtered and reused for pools and plants. Visitors can walk to each of the three wings, or head directly to the central atrium, also known as the Heart Room.
