

Bridging Binaries

This organic earth art installation metaphorically represents all our attempts to "bridge" the gap between the present human ways & a more sustainable future of living. It encourages us to look at things from a fresh pair of eyes and to try and strike a balance between the irreconcilable binaries, i.e., a life built totally around modern material culture & technology vs a deep rooted yearning for a simple life purely based in nature.

The design creates a backdrop for two very different thematically curated outdoor / semi-outdoor spatial zones. It acts as a physical and visual transitional element between these two distinct zones. The South, South-East and South-West faces of the vaults having the photovoltaic skin will therefore have a shimmering, very technological, "futuristic" looking appearance.

The North, North-West and North-East facing sides of the vaults will not have the solar panels installed. They will retain their rugged, down to earth look & feel. This will create an obvious backdrop that can easily integrate with the "Nature-Future" zone. This "secret" zone will have a wall of greenery deliberately built all around it. The greenery could also further extend around the water body thus including it within this zone.

Northern View

Southern View