

A CELEBRATION OF LIGHT, WATER AND MIRROR

Light has a special place in human life.

Our ancestors considered light sacred and its source, the sun, life-giving.

In the past, celestial bodies such as the moon the sun and the stars were far away and unknown to humans.

The brightness of the days began with the sunrise and ended with its sunset, for this reason they believed that there was a war between good and evil, a war between light and darkness.

They considered light as hope, life, and happiness, and darkness as the end, despair, and sorrow.

Therefore, they believed that with the beginning of the day, light wins over darkness and awakens the hope of living in humans.

They put the mirror in the light so that the light is reflected and the joy and warmth of their life is multiplied in the mirror.

In the ancient documents left from Mesopotamia and Egypt (3000 years BC) it shows that people considered the mirror to be one of the components of the human soul because, like water, it was a symbol of purity and honesty and a reflection of the truth around it.

In the past, people hoped that after death, the human soul would return to the sun in the form of pieces of a mirror, where it would be complete again and come back to life. Birth, life and death and rebirth.

The light in the mirror is a reminder of endless hope, a hope that started from a source far from the reach of humans, the sun.
